

The Shear Gap: why benchtop tests mislead

Common release assays sit near 0.1–0.3 dyne/cm^2 — a thousand-fold below the forces a carrier meets in flowing blood. A formulation can look stable in a vial and still fail under physiological shear.